

In tunnelling, the swelling causes a long-term heave of the tunnel floor, which may impair the serviceability of the structure (a). On the other hand, when attempting to prevent floor heave by means of an invert arch, so-called swelling pressure develops, which may damage the tunnel lining (b).

Figure 7. Problems in tunnels crossing swelling rock.